SOCIAL MATTERS. The Veazey-Walton Wedding Recep tions and Luncheous.

Mise Anna Gettysburg Veasey, daughter of the interstate commerce commissioner and W. G. Veazey, and Mr. Clifford & Walton of this city were wedded last night at Triple any church at 8 o'clock, the Rev. Dr. Mckow fliciating. The wedding guests were seared by the ushers, who were Liout Rober, Mr. F. C. Partridge, Mr. Albin Veasey, brother of the bride, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Harry Cilley and Mr. James Page. The groom awaited the bride and her friends in the chancel, accompanied by his nearest friend, Lieut, Landrey of the navy. The bridesmaids were Miss Barriott Hutchinson. Miss Elizabeth Smith of Salisbury. Vt., Miss Jeannette Halford and Miss Julia Pat terson. Miss Madelaine Townsend was maid of honor. The bride entered with her father. The bridal robe was a superb gown of white satin, en traine, the front embroidered in a design in silver of a sheaf of wheat and grasses. The V-shaped opening of the bodice was filled with ruffles of point lace and the puffed sleeves were edged with lace. The tulle veil was fastened with sprays of his of the valley and the british bouquet was composed of lilies of the valley and maiden-hair fern. The bride also carried a prayer book bound in white kid. She was given the middle name of Gettysburg because she was born on the day of that battle and while her father was fighting at the head of the sixteenth Vermont regiment. The bridesmaids were demi-trained frocks of white tulle and white satin bodices, low and sleeveless. Two of them wore jonguils, two wore Waterville roses and the maid of honor wore hyacinths. They carried prayer books bound in white kid with the monogrom W. V. in silver on the backs. Miss Townsend's dress was fashioned after the Greek models and was of lavender crepe. After the service at the church the bridal party and the wedding guests drove to the residence of Senator and Mrs. Edmunds where a reception was held by Mr. and Mrs. Walton, who received the congratulations of their friends. Mrs. Veazey wore a dress of heliotrope-striped crepe trimmed with point lace and steel and straw passementerie. Among the guests were Mrs. Morrison Fuller of Boston, Secretary Proctor, Mr. Fletcher Proctor, Col. and Mrs. Holbrook, Mr. and Mrs. John H. Flagg of New York, Gov. and Mrs. Pingree of Vermont, Governor Stewart, Col. and Mrs. Estee, Miss Clara Beard of Lowell, Miss Moore, Miss Isabel Swan, Miss Anna C. TO EXTEND POTOMAC AVENUE. Recently the Commissioners received a pe-tition from J. H. Smoot and others praying for the opening of Potomac avenue, in George-town, from O to P streets. The matter was referred to Capt, Rossell for report. Today he submitted a tracing of the ground with the statement that nothing could be done to open this street except by a special appropriation from Congress. He says it seems a desirable thing to do could an appropriation be obtained for the condemnation of the land, and thinks TO WIDEN B STREET.

At a meeting of the Citizens' Association of East Washington last January a resolution was passed requesting the Commissioners to ask Congress to pass an act increasing the width of south B street between 1st and 2d streets east Cooper, Viscount Morpett, Mr. Leif Jones of England, Mr. H. G. Edwardes, Mr. Michael Herbert, Mr. Arthur Herbert and Mr. Spring necessary to take a portion of the lot on which the new library building is now being constructed. He says he understands that it is proposed to widen this street 50 feet, and that cannot be done unless legislation is obpany at a reception from 9 to 12 last evening at tained from Congress. In conclusion he says he thinks the Commissioners should ask for the legislation to widen the street. The Commissioners have approved his recommendation.

GUIDE STONES FOR STREET EXTENSIONS. The subject of setting guide stones for exten-sion of the city beyond its present limits and along the District line has been before the Commissioners for some time. Superintendent Mendenhall of the Coast and Geodetic Survey replied to a letter of Col. Robert today on the sut ject. He says that after a careful examina-tion he finds that the stones will cost about $25 in accordance with a plan based upon a true north and south line passing through the cen-ter of the Capitol building and a system of Wednesday evening, the 16th instant, at 9 rectangular co-ordinates referred to, so that north and south and east and west streets shall be parallel instead of arcs of great and small circles, will cost about $30 per stone, making the stone when in position cost about $55 each. AN INTERESTING EXHIBITION IN THE WAR DE PARTMENT CORRIDORS-UNIFORMS OF THE COM-TINENTAL ARMY AND THOSE OF TODAY-HOW OFFICERS AND MEN WERE AND ARE ATTIRED.

The quartermaster general of the army has just completed his contribution to the embellishments in the corridors of the War Department that are designed to show the public something of the work and the workings of the official neighborhoods through which they pass in going through the building. This display consists of twenty-one life-size human figures showing the uniforms worn by the army of the The mint julep will soon begin to blossom in | United States from the revolutionary period to the present time. They are contained in large glass cases in the corridors on the third floor of the department building. The figures are lifelike and are designed with especial care to avoid the clothing store dummy look that such things usually have. Several years ago Gen. Holabird conceived the idea of making a collection of this kind, and he has been studying the subject, investigating the records of the de-partment, and overhauling every possible source of information that would throw any light on the matter. The Washington letter on file in the State Department were looked over, and all the orders issued in the earlier periods of the republic, with a view to determining the exact nature of the original

UNIFORMS OF THE CONTINENTAL ARMY. This has taken some time, and it was only few months ago that orders were given to Major John V. Furey, paymaster in charge of the Philadelphia depot, to prepare the figures and make the uniforms. The outfit arrived in the city only a few days ago, and its erection in the cases was under the personal supervision of Major Furey. There are but two periods represented, because of the fact that the gov-ernment has only supplied the uniforms of the army from the time of the rebellion. It was before then that the gaudy trappings of the fighting men were in vogue.

In the first case are five figures, one of a general officer who, by a curious piece of anachronism, is engaged in reading the order issued by Gen. Washington prescribing the very uniform which he wears. The paper which the officer has in his papier-mache hands is an exact fac simile of the original, even the paper being re-produced from the stock of a junk dealer of Philadelphia. It is worn and torn and dis-colored, just as is that which is filed in the archives of the department. A REVOLUTIONARY OFFICER.

The officer's face, which is an excellent piece of work, portraying a good deal of the Continental character about which so much has been said in prose and in verse, wears a stern expression, and to the spectator who is not told what it is he is supposed to be reading there is a strong intimation that the news he is receiving is of a most serious nature, relating to a defeat of the army or some such disaster instead of the details of the cut of his own coat. This coat is of the regulation buff and blue style, with beautifully bright brass buttons and immaculate facings. It is all of new cloth, it having been decided an impractica-bility to reproduce the age of the goods that would naturally be expected in an original uniorm. The main desire was to show what a new outfit on a soldier of the war for liberty looked like when he put it on for the first time. The legs of the officer, which are well rounded and nicely proportioned, although they did not ride bicycles in those days, are encased in closely knitted stockings of a dark gray and the shoes are fluished off with bright steel buckles. A three-cornered hat is set firmly on the white head and a short cue of hair hangs down from under the rear rim, wound to within an inch of the end with a black cloth.

AN ANXIOUS AID. Behind the officer and a bit to his right, with his hat held respectfully in his hands, is a actual contents of the letter, though it is a grave question if the prescribing of a new uniform ing that his sister was at the point of death | cer is about the same as that worn by the other, except as to the shoulder rigging. The general wears gold epaulettes, which hang some inches down his shoulder, while the aid's coat is quite bare at the same points. PRIVATE SOLDIERS.

Standing in front of the general, with his hat on his shead and his hand on the hilt of his saber, is a private soldier, the orderly who has just brough; the letter to the officer. His face is as stolid and impassive as that of the typical soidier who is supposed to march up to the mouth of a cannon with the same ease and in-difference as if he were advancing upon the dinner table. He wears a helmet and is dressed in a buff and blue uniform, with knickerbockers and buckled shoes. Just behind him are two other soldiers of the ranks, one a fellow dressed in a suit of fur, his hat being of a longnaired material, giving his head an enormous bushy appearance. He is a ranger and his hand grasps a long rifle that looks as if it might do almost as much damage as the modern weapon. The other man is a private of infantry. Across the corridor, in another case corresponding to this one, are five other figures, all representative of the revolutionary period. They show the uniforms of the different They show the uniforms of the branches of the service, the most conspicuous one being that of a "Morgan rifleman," a tall individual dressed all in white buckskin with its edges cut into strings that remind one of the costumes described by the immortal Cooper. A wide-brimmed hat of large proportions and of the same material as the clothes sets off this of men, the cowboy. THE SOLDIER OF TODAY is the subject of treatment by means of eleven figures in three cases ranged along the west walls of the corridor. There is one man and sometimes two men from each arm of the service. In the lower case is a cadet of the military academy at West Point, a slight, trim young man with his waist made very small under a tight-fitting dress coat, his chin up to the regdation mark, his hands down at his sides every line about him bespeaking the greatest trasts strongly with the beard of the sergeant of the hospital corps on his left, and with the private of the signal corps on his right. The atter is dressed in his new uniform recently prescribed by Gen. Greely, which looks not un ike that of a Pullman car conductor. A neat cap bearing an appropriate device makes him look quite jaunty, and he is given a military ap-pearance by the great red-centered signal flag which he holds in his hand. In the other cases are sergeants of artillery, corporals of cavalry, privates of infantry, sergeants of engineers, and so on through the different grades of American soldierdom. The collection includes only the uniforms of the present period that are furnished by the quartermaster's department of the army to the privates and non-commissioned officers. The commissioned officers have to buy their own uniforms. A few figures showing the present officers' uniform may, however, be procured

The collection has already attracted a great deal of attention and is made the subject of much study by those interested in army affairs. It will soon be reinforced by something else, which the officials of the quartermaster general's office are guarding as a great secret.

The arms used in the equipment of the figures are all originals and have a direct relation to the periods represented by the uni-forms. In the case of the revolutionary soldier the matter of obtaining the proper arms was not an easy one, but a search of some of the old armories of the country produced the desired weapons. On being put into the hands of the figures it was necessary in some instances to take the mechanism to pieces and put it to-gether again afterward. The figures are of papier mache made from old scraps of paper ollected from the quartermaster's depots.
